ABOUT THE CONFERENCE

Public Interest Design — Global is an opportunity to discuss the emerging practice of designing for social impact and how best to radically increase the value of design for the public good. Governments and corporations have begun to recognize that design can be a tool for democratic decision making, empowerment and engagement. While inclusive design practices worldwide are beginning to help communities use design to address their most critical issues and define resilient futures as they see fit, built environment professionals still remain at the margins of these lively debates and initiatives. The conference will focus on two important sub themes within Public Interest Design: (1) Design as Social Enterprise and (2) Design that Restores Justice. All work related directly to one of the sub-themes will be considered. All design work related to one of these themes will be considered.
